Charles James: Butterfly dress 1955

This dress was made by Charles James in 1955 he wanted to design a dress inspired by metamorphosis so he came it with this.

It is made from silk, synthetic and metal. He designed the front of the dress to represent the cocoon of the butterfly. The back of the dress is to represent the butterfly wings it has 20 layers of synthetic material it weighs a total of 8 pounds! When he first sold this dress he sold it for $1,250 but now it goes for around $12,000. The owner of it today says it's quite comfortable to wear.

Challenge 7

Vines wrapped around legs, arms and neck.

I've chose this design because last year's met galers outfits were extra and unique witch is essential, if you want to make an entrance. You might have seen lady gaga's outfit or should i say outfits they were unforgettable so i wanted to design something that no ones done before so i came up with this. If i could do this again i wouldn't but the vines on the legs and the colour of the flowers i would make a lighter shade and not so vibrant.

Sweetheart neckline

Dark pink and dark blue flowers

Short to long skirt

Challenge 10

I have made and decorated the first letter of my name with paint and cardboard i have chose this design because the background is my favourite colour and i just love painting flowers especially daisy's. When i was cutting it out i smudged the paint. Oops

Before

I have chosen to upcycle this white top because i wanted to do some embroidering so i embroidered some blue lavender in the middle of the shirt and cropped it. I tried to hem the bottom but its very loose.

This is before and after.
