Andre Sanchez

Born in Bordeaux, artist André Sanchez moved to Paris in 2000 and started to focus on photography, graphic design, and collage. He learned digital photography on the job and played around with all the possibilities it offered him. Image processing, effects, and post-production software... He experimented and created original artworks to the point that, soon, what had begun as a pastime became a passion and, over the years, a career in its own right. On the borders between photography and graphic design, his style has taken galleries by storm in the four corners of Europe (Paris, Amsterdam, London, Barcelona, and Brussels) and has drawn the attention of numerous clients, including some famous publishing houses (including Grasset, Payot & Rivages, Condé Nast, and Robert Laffont) and prestigious magazines (Le Monde, Psychologies Magazine, Rolling Stone, Libération, The Sunday Telegraph, The Sunday Times).

Michael Mew

Michael Mew creates mixed media collage paintings that frequently focus on botanical subjects (other times, he focuses on toys and other ephemera of modern society). Michael explains how growing up in a suburb of Los Angeles affected his choice to employ found objects as collage materials. He says that the alleyways that ran between houses for trash pick-ups "afforded the opportunity to explore. My wanderings took place as I walked the alleys studying the cast offs and picking up discards." Later, his "adult indulgences" turned to flea markets. "It was these finds that I used to combine and create assemblage art, which has now been transposed into my current collage work."

Eduardo Paolozzi

Eduardo Paolozzi was born on March 7, 1924, in Edinburgh, United Kingdom. From childhood he collected ephemera—science-fiction magazines, discarded toys, and other objets trouvés—which became the basis for a lifelong fascination with repurposing found objects and images in his art.

Eduardo Paolozzi and The Rise of the Machines

Even in the 1940s Eduardo Paolozzi viewed machines and our ever-increasing reliance on technology as something to be feared. Though they would pop up in his artworks as luxurious if somewhat ludicrous domestic appliances, more often than not they appeared as violent and dispassionate tools of authority (think more Terminator than Henry the Hoover)
